Hockey 101

The 2024 Stanley Cup Playoffs are here! Along with the goals, saves, and hits, you might see something hairy on the ice this postseason—playoff beards! NHL players often go the entire playoffs without shaving their facial hair—a superstition that has turned into tradition when it started in the 1980s! Players don't shave their beards to maintain the winning vibes on and off the ice, kind of like how fans may never wash their favorite player's jersey during the playoffs to continue the winning juju. The fuzzy tradition began with the 1980 New York Islanders team that went on a hot winning streak while keeping their whiskers long and razors untouched! The bushy Islanders went on to hoist the Stanley Cup four times in a row from 1980-1983! The superstition has since been inherited by every other NHL team during the playoffs. The playoff beard comes in many shapes and sizes such as goatees, mutton chops, mustaches (See Filip Forsberg), and many more! Keep your eye out during the playoffs and you'll notice some shaggy faced skaters!
