

DARREN PANG

TELEVISION COLOR ANALYST

Darren Pang is in his third season as the Television Color Analyst for Blackhawks hockey.

Pang returned to the Blackhawks in June 2023 after spending 14 seasons as the lead color analyst for the St. Louis Blues on Bally Sports Midwest. His broadcast career comes full circle with this hire as Pang's first industry experience came in Chicago on Hawkvision and covering Blackhawks games on WBBM-AM Radio in the early 1990s.

He also serves as a lead analyst and ice-level reporter on TNT where he covers the regular-season, Stanley Cup Playoffs and the Stanley Cup Final. Before joining TNT, he worked as an ice-level analyst for NBC Sports on their NHL coverage from 2008-13, including covering various NHL Winter Classics. Pang also served as a color commentator for the Phoenix Coyotes (2005-09) and was a studio and game analyst for TSN from 2005-14.

Pang worked as a top analyst for ESPN and ABC from 1993-2005, has broadcast 97 Stanley Cup Final games on national TV and worked three Winter Olympic Games (1998, 2002, 2010). Pang was the first Olympic ice hockey reporter to get a "between the benches" position with CBS for the 1998 Winter Olympic games in Nagano, Japan.

In addition to his broadcast credentials, Pang played three NHL seasons as a goaltender with the Blackhawks between 1984-89, posting a 27-35-7 record with a 4.05 goals-against average and a .882 save percentage. He set a franchise record with six assists during the 1987-88 campaign. He played in seven American Hockey League games with the Nova Scotia Oilers in 1986-87 and in 147 International Hockey League games with Milwaukee (1984-85) and Saginaw (1985-87; 1988-89).
